Understanding This Week's Under-Reported Story- Reinstating the draft

The Heritage Foundation/MAGA Republicans are interested in re-instating the draft by another name: Universal Service Corps. Or at least that's what Chris Miller, author of Project 2025's chapter on reforming the Dept. of Defense, calls it in his interview with Kevin Roberts, president of the Heritage Foundation, taped about a year ago and available on YouTube.

In the interview, starting at the 30 minute mark, Roberts decries the lack of civil cohesion in the United States and the "just utter lack of patriotism in the proper sense."

Miller agrees and says "So recommendation #1 [for solving that problem] is universal service. It doesn't have to be just military service. Go work in a nursing home, teachers aide, go work in the national park, if you want to go overseas we can have a little kind of quasi Peace Corps thing."

Next, they reminisce about WWII movies showing that guys from New York City, the South, Chicago and "the rube from Iowa," all getting along great in the bowels of a ship or in a barracks.

Then Miller gets to the heart of his Universal Service Corps (notice the words in bold): "I do these informal surveys every time I go out - with younger people because they're the ones that have to do it." I'll say, if 'you have an opportunity' after high school to do universal service for two years, you come out the other side with education/veterans bill type thing where you have benefits on the backside. Nine out of 10 say they would be interested." Notice the deceptive use of the word "opportunity" - as if he's talking about a voluntary program.

"There's always a guy who says "that's unconstitutional," and Miller says "so let's go ahead and put in the structure that protects you and your beliefs. I mean we used to have conscience objectors." When did we have conscientious objectors? When there was a draft.

Then Miller says "You know, the Civilian Conservation Core, who ran that? The military ran that. And many people claim that their organization concepts and the leadership that those officers and sergeants had to do during that period during the Great Depression were directly responsible for the success we had in WWII because they learned about large organizations and logistics and all that stuff."

And Roberts replies: "That's an underappreciated reality about why the United States was able ... to turn on a dime from a peace footing to a war footing in WWII. ... When I mention this idea of, as you put it, Universal Service Corps, [a hawk in Congress] said "that's it!" The point is there's something there that intrinsically in the idea is good for our civil society and for our military, but also on the policy and political level."

Who is Chris Miller?

He's a veteran of Afghanistan and Iraq, and worked as the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations/Low Intensity Conflict in the Dept. of Defense during the Trump administration.

Trump appointed Miller as Acting Secretary of Defense Nov. 9, 2020 (six days after Election Day) after he fired Mark Esper, who earlier that summer had contradicted Trump on using the Insurrection Act to deploy active-duty U.S. troops to respond to civil unrest across the country sparked by the murder of George Floyd.

Miller testified before the Jan. 6 committee about the National Guard response to the insurrection, saying that Trump never gave him a formal order to have 10,000 troops ready to be deployed to the Capitol on January 6, 2021."

Miller was not implicated in any of the finger-pointing that went on after Jan. 6 about why it took so long for the National Guard to arrive on Capitol Hill.

Miller wrote the chapter on the Dept. of Defense for the Heritage Foundation's Project 2025. In that chapter, Miller outlines many reforms, such as expelling those with "gender dysphoria" and restoring to active duty servicemembers who were discharged for refusing the COVID vaccine.

He would also require "completion of the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery (ASVAB)—the military entrance examination—by students in schools that receive federal funding." In other words, school districts would lose federal funding if their high school seniors were not required to take the ASVAB.

Currently, school districts have the option of requiring their students to take the ASVAB. Many high schools, such as Liberty-Eylau High School in Texarkana, TX, make taking the test a requirement for graduation, as described by the Washington Post this week. Miller's requirement that all school districts force their students to take the test or lose federal funding is the new twist.

When queried by the authors of the Washington Post article about mandatory military service, Miller said "It reinforces the bonds of civility ... Why wouldn't we give that a try?"

Perhaps Miller should spend more time wondering why nearly one in five of the Jan. 6 insurrectionists were military veterans and at least five were on active duty.

On Tuesday, Trump called "completely untrue" the claim that some in his inner circle are urging him to consider a mandatory military service rule. That's something he's "never even thought" of instituting.

But he also lied 30,573 times while in office.

Remember that the price of a postcard stamp goes from 53 cents to 56 cents on July 14. We're thinking of doing another yard sale in August!

 - The day after the verdict, MAGA's hopes for mistrial were raised by a reply to a Facebook post on the New York state court system page purported to be from a cousin of a juror who had inside knowledge that Trump would be convicted.
